How do we actively teach the Just Cause in Computing and Business?

Community

In Computing and Business we study a variety of different units in which we consider the wider impact of business and technology use on the local community. Whether this be from the physical impact of the waste materials created or the jobs and prospects that technology creates in different areas of the world. We look at how different stakeholders are affected by businesses and technology use/creation, and what businesses are doing in order to work with the communities they serve.

We look at how businesses are using technology to improve people's lives, and we look at what businesses and technology use may look like in the future.

Chances

Computing and Business offers a variety of opportunities to experience real-life problems and provides experience of industry standard challenges. We utilise a plethora of industry standard software to provide life-like challenges to our learners. Learners have the chance to carry out research into current problems that current businesses face, and we challenge learners to provide a range of solutions to these problems. We provide our learners with exposure to industry-standard, in-demand software to allow them to develop their skills and gain a competitive advantage over other learners their age.

Choices

Students have the opportunity to develop their own solutions to problems that real businesses face in our subjects. Students are able to analyse and evaluate a problem, and devise a solution using industry-standard software. Students will consider a range of factors that could influence their solutions and will tailor their solutions accordingly.
